The President's Piece

Chris Coleman

I saw someone on the 'Ovalabout' the other day. He looked like a workman. He was standing beside some big bags of something. I have passed by several times since. He has gone. The bags haven't. Progress?

Good to see that some of the Kamares Village roads have been resurfaced recently. Unless you live in one, don't bother going down those roads; they are all cul-de-sacs. If you do live in one and are driving onto the main roads, just ignore the lack of markings. It's perfectly acceptable to stop and let other traffic go by. Meantime, I'll be giving the council another nudge to do the white-lining.

If your water supply has just been taken over by Tala, you should have received your first bill. I didn't, but I went down to the Council office and they very quickly printed one out for me. Everything was in order (I paid special attention to the initial reading and correct address). Now that the system has been tested, I'll be making out a direct debit for future payments. The charges, incidentally, are exactly the same as before.

Maggie Wright sent me the shortest ever reminder of something I wanted to say, just one character: 🍷 ! It wasn't meant to be a reminder of course, just an expression of what she feels should be on every right-thinking person's mind. Well, it was wonderful to have a Kamares Wine Society event after a long break. Peter Reynolds of Wines of the World was welcomed back after several years, and presented some of his imported wines. No doubt, we'll soon be able to see some of the local producers again, and sample their wares.

The Kamares Club's next event is being organized in conjunction with the KVHA. I hope you've seen the flyer; if not, scroll down. Alexandros is a great musician (saxophone, clarinet and violin); he's played here before, and he's well worth listening to; and take a look at the menu - a really attractive Asian buffet. I look forward to seeing lots of members and friends there.

When we restarted Quiz Nights last November, we had three objectives:

- Happy Hour would bring residents together to meet socially.
- There would be a chance to eat out one evening a week, without leaving the village.
- The return of the quiz would bring back a popular event.

The quiz is going well. The trouble is: that doesn't help the Kamares Club, which generously puts up three bottles of wine as prizes. Most places that have a Happy Hour hope that people will stay on and either eat or buy full-price drinks later. This isn't happening much. Most people just have one drink and either go away or make their discounted drinks last throughout the quiz. It's not meanness, and I wouldn't want people to think they were doing wrong by not drinking. But it doesn't do club profits much good. In fact, the club does not even recoup the costs of opening up and providing staff. Now, it's not my job to make the club profitable, but I am concerned that Leptos might reasonably decide it isn't in their interest to keep opening up. I wonder if there is anything we can do about that. I'd be very interested to learn (president@kvha.cy) what would encourage more members to use the club on Wednesday evenings.
